

into the Constitution that the Legislature had full power to act. The bill was referred to a committee. It was then held that the Legislature might decide upon what contingency, including a vote of the people, a law might take effect. This was a local option question.

Legal Decision.

In the Fredericksburg case Judge Keith said that the Legislature's powers were without limit except as restricted by the Constitution either in express terms or by strong implication. In the case of Button against the State Corporation Commission the court said that all doubts must be resolved in favor of the validity of the acts of the Legislature.

"In this instance," said Dr. Cannon, "the people do not frame the law. They do not initiate legislation, but only decide when they shall take advantage of it."

"I see that the Chamber of Commerce has passed resolutions. No, not the chamber, but the directors. A number of members have told me to-day that this action made them very sad, and that they were very much ashamed and did not intend it at all. They say that the directors should have acted only as individuals, and have given others the right to protest."

Causes of Strife.

It had been said, continued Dr. Cannon, that a State prohibition campaign would stir up bitterness and strife. He then quoted from the Bible: "Who hath strife? They that tarry long at the wine." He said words without cause and babbling can now be seen in the records of the police courts. The strife, he thought, is stirred up by people who wanted to protect their interests. North Carolina has stood an election of this sort and is still there. Richmond runs booster trains to catch the business of this prosperous State. The superintendent of a division of the Southern Railway, he continued, told him recently how much better order is on the trains under prohibition.

It would be unwise, he argued, not to refer the matter to the people and keep it out of politics. There had been rumors of deals in the Legislature. He preferred to trust the people rather than 110 members in the Legislature.

lature. The vote of sixty-six House members, he thought, was a sufficient demonstration of what the people want.

Dismisses Legal Point.

Thomas W. Wickes, the next speaker, said it was his duty to talk about constitutionality. No lawyer, he said, denies the right of the Legislature to pass this law. Having disposed of this proposition in this manner, he said, the House is more in touch with the people than is the Senate.

He warned his hearers that the same result might come as when the Democrats decided to obey the wishes of the English bondholders in Readjuster days and were swept from power.

"On what sort of meat do you Senators feed," he inquired, "that the people must come and stand at the doors of the Capitol and beg for the right to vote?"

This question, he continued, would array brother against brother and father against son. In the appropriation bill thousands of dollars were being spent to make men out of boys by education. But nothing, he argued, would make them good as would keeping the liquor out. The members had listened to the people on the convict labor and lime-grinding matters, and would in this but for the tenacity of the liquor interest.

Mr. Wickes's Remarks.

Rev. J. J. Wickes, pastor of the Leigh Street Baptist Church, said it was a question of men or money. "There is no man in the State of Virginia," he said, "who opposes the enabling act except for the money there is in it for him. I stand in favor of men."

"The Chamber of Commerce opposes men and mentions money. They talk about millions. I represent men and dollars. The liquor traffic never earned a dollar. It is a case of $4,000,000 of money against 2,000,000 people. And they tell us about taxation. Is the State poor? It cannot educate its boys without taxing them? They want the drunkards to pay the taxes to make them rich. Shame on you!"

"And the bankers come and ask that their coffers be filled and that they be permitted to pay large dividends at the cost of the manhood of Virginia. They would fatten on the poor boys driven down by the saloon. I stand for men, not for mammon."

W. A. Moncure arose and said that as a representative of the Chamber of Commerce he intended to make no personal allusions or insinuations. "But the remarks of that person," he said, "are personally offensive and insulting."

Colonel Purcell Replies.

Indignation at the attack made upon him showed in every line of the face of Colonel John B. Purcell as he advanced. He denounced Mr. Wickes as no gentleman, and tore, he said, the hypocrite's mask from him. After thirty-three years in Richmond, where his life is well known, he had been insulted before a legislative committee by a man he had never seen before.

"The mask of the hypocrite shall not protect him from the public eye," he said. "He has uttered," he shouted, "and I here hurl them back in his teeth."

This he did as close to Mr. Wickes's teeth as he could get. The minister sat as composedly as he could in his chair, making no motion of defense or apology or anger.

"And I am told by another gentleman whom I have never seen before," said Colonel Purcell, turning his attention to Dr. Cannon, "that I don't represent anybody save a few directors." He then told of the situation in the Chamber of Commerce, whereby the directors may act for the body, and then presented the resolutions to the committee.

Personal Affront.

John C. Easley, another member of the chamber's committee, said that a personal affront had been uttered by Mr. Wickes to every member of the commercial body and the great interests it represents. He himself had never been interested in any liquor business, and his personal life was as pure as the driven snow.

temperate as that of Mr. Wickes or any other man of the cloth. In fact, on his side he could certainly claim more temperance of speech than could the other. "If this is a sample of temperance," he said, "for the love of God defend us from it."

He was speaking, he insisted, for the 850 members of the Chamber of Commerce. It is chartered by the Legislature, and the directors may act. He resented the idea that he had advocates of the enabling act representing all the temperance people of the country.

To bring about State prohibition, continued Mr. Easley, would be to lop off the limbs and leave the root of the matter. It would be to take the liquor traffic from men under the eyes of the law and subject to the scrutiny of the courts, and transfer it to the blind tiger. If prohibition would prohibit no member of the Chamber of Commerce would be found opposing it. Therefore a victory for prohibition would be but a barren one. He quoted Admiral Evans as saying that he had rather anchor his fleet in any other port in the world than those of Maine, so far as intemperance of his men was concerned. The passage of the Jordan bill would be but agitation, with no possible good to accrue from it.

Others From Chamber.

James N. Boyd, president of the Planters' National Bank; L. Z. Morris, president of the Savings Bank of Richmond; and J. G. Corley, president of the Corley Piano Company, the other members of the chamber's committee, did not speak.

The only other speaker of the evening was George McD. Blake. He told of the time when liquor money kept the schools of Richmond open. Mr. Wickes said that they had better have remained closed. Mr. Blake retorted that some of the people who shout the loudest for prohibition pay the least taxes. He made the statement that more whiskey is being sold in North Carolina to-day than under license, and that there are more licensed distillers there to-day than in any other State.

The Anti-Saloon League, he asserted, had spent more money during the past two years than the whiskey people had spent in twenty years. He defied them to show a single man who had been "won" by the Anti-Saloon League. "I have had no vote of the law by licensed dealers in Richmond in five years. He spoke of the prosecutions in 'dry' places for illicit liquor selling. He said, in conclusion, would be 'wet' to-day but for the work of the men who sell it illegally.

The committee then rose until tomorrow night at 8 o'clock.

vent the necessity of the recall of the judges, I am not advocating the recall of the judges; I am advocating the recall of the Legislature to its proper place. "My proposal applies only to the legislative acts which the courts declare unconstitutional. I refer specifically to laws passed in the collective interests of the whole community, passed by the legislative body, your body here, in the exercise of the power to promote the general welfare, in the exercise of the police power, which is inherent in the Legislature.

"If such a law duly dealing with the collective interests of the community as a whole, passed by the Legislature and signed by the Governor, is declared unconstitutional by the court, I ask that the people be given the right, if they choose, to exercise that right, themselves, to pass final judgment upon the proposition.

Colonel Roosevelt then denied the statement of his critics that this plan would substitute "popular whim" for carefully considered action by the courts.

"My proposal," the Colonel continued, "is that then, if the court has decided that the Legislature plus the executive has exceeded the power granted by the people to them under the Constitution, that the people shall themselves have the right to say whether their representatives in the Legislature and the executive office were right, or whether their representatives on the court were right. Provision should be made that no vote could be had save at a regular election not less than six months distant after the appeal to the people is made."

Roosevelt May Expect No Succor From Republicans of This State.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)

Roanoke, Va., February 26.—To-day Secretary George L. Hart, of the Republican State Committee, was asked for a statement concerning Colonel Roosevelt's announcement. He said that Congressman Slamp, chairman of the party in the State, is in Louisville, Ky., at the bedside of his brother, who is ill. Mr. Hart said that he would give out the following for the Republican organization in Virginia:

"So far as the Republican organization in Virginia is concerned, we are unqualifiedly for Mr. Taft. We believe his administration deserves it and that he is entitled to another term to carry out his views.

"We admire Mr. Roosevelt and are of opinion that he was a great President, but we will instruct for Taft."
